Prisoners snap to as former commandant Colonel Peyton Winlock conducts inspection. They make a fetish of order, hoping to impress U.S. captors with Nazi efficiency. U.S. plane model hanging from ceiling is prisoners' work. Most are German models.

Prisoner talks with sister from Chicago, where he lived before he went to Germany 10 years ago. Captain M. B. Cooper (center) remained during two-hour visit. Their conversation was mostly family, not about the war. Few prisoners have visitors.

Noncommissioned officers meet to discuss "policy matters," their Afters parked under the table. Actually, over-all policies are set by American programs run by Germans. Breckinridge prisoners are enlisted men.

Barbed-wire fence surrounds camp. Guardhouse (above) is for unruly prisoners who escape get more than five miles from camp. Ignorant many prisoners think that 30 or 40 miles from camp they will be a
